NEW BAPTIST STUDENT UNION BUILDING

Baptist Student Union Dedicates Building

Tonight at 8 the Baptist Student Union will officially open and dedicate its new building and facilities on Hillsboro Street.

The Baptist Center, as the new building is named, was designed by Raleigh architect F. Carter Williams, and cost an estimated $200,000. Faculty and denominational officials will attend the dedication along with a number of students, according to BSU director Leroy Richardson. An open house will follow the dedication.

The new building includes a lounge and lobby, a multi-purpose lecture and assembly room, a library and conference room, administrative offices, a commercial kitchen with modern appliances, and a work room. Parking room for 22 cars is provided beneath the building. The entire center is fully air-conditioned and heated. The modern appearance of the structure is increased by the use of tinted glass around the entrance, a facade of decorative cement blocks on the east end of the building, extensive carpeting, and the decorative and structural use of metal and concrete.

Code Board Convicts Pair

The Honor Code Board handed down two convictions in cases heard Tuesday night, December 1.

In the first case heard, a student accused of falsifying a note from his parents regarding a traffic ticket pleaded guilty and was placed on two semesters' probation.

The second trial, also expedited by a guilty plea, involved a student accused of stealing a sign. A guilty verdict was given; the student was placed on two semesters' probation.

The new center was designed for the "maximum of beauty and utility and student use," according to Richardson. He also mentioned that the center will not be restricted to strictly Baptist functions, but will serve the needs of the campus and campus community.

Richardson has served at State since 1958 as Baptist chaplain and director of the BSU. He previously was chaplain at Washington and Lee University and Lexington Military Institute.

In an effort to make the center as open for use as possible, Richardson said plans include a host who will live in an apartment room in the center.

Twelfth Annual Art Auction Set For Thompson Monday

By BILL FISHBURNE

The twelfth Annual Art Auction will be held Monday at 8 p.m. in the Frank Thompson Theatre.

Works for the auction have been contributed this year by artists from all over the state, by patrons outside the state, and by students in the School of Design. One of the largest contributors this year is Duncan Stuart, professor of Product Design and Architecture in the School of Design. Stuart has more than 15 sketches and paintings in the auction this year.

With 134 pieces in all to be sold, the auction this year will be one of the largest ever held.

Also, this will be the first year that the auction has been held in the Frank Thompson Theatre. It is usually held at the Erdahl-Cloyd Union.

The usual cast of auctioneers will be back this year, including the world famous (according to him) Morris Parker, who has shorn his beard especially for the occasion. Others who are expected to serve as auctioneers are Dr. Joseph Sloane, head of the UNCCH Department of Art; Dean Henry Kamphoefner of the School of Design; and Ben Williams, curator of the North Carolina Museum of Art.

The auction is run as a true auction, and anyone is eligible to purchase anything (if he has the money, according to Gene Messick, co-editor of the Student Publication of the School of Design).

The proceeds from the Auction are applied to the Student Publication, which is published once or twice a year by the students in the School of Design.

Tutorial Project Volunteers Needed

State students and faculty interested in participating in the N. C. State Tutorial Project may attend an organizational meeting of the tutorial group Monday at 6:30 p.m. at the new Baptist Center on Hillsboro Street.

Information for those wishing to become tutors, or interested in cooperating with the project in any capacity, will be available at this time. Due to reorganization and expansion of services, the project will need any who are willing to lend assistance.

Senators Reject Parking Measure

By BOB HOLMES

In an extended session Wednesday night, the student legislature talked and voted the "Omnibus Parking Plan" to death.

After a lengthy debate and question session, the Promotions Committee bill, which would have re-shuffled all parking areas, was defeated by approximately a two-thirds majority.

Reaction to the defeat of the measure was immediate. SG President John Atkins expressed disappointment that the measure, which he termed "the best developed and best presented bill that has been before Student Government," had not been fully considered by the senators.

Senator Bill Howle of the School of Textiles stated that if no action was taken "students will continue to lose parking places on campus just as they lost 30 places this year."

Senator Billie Jones, who presented the bill for the Promotions Committee, stated that he would tear the bill up and rewrite it if necessary but pleaded with the legislature not to "put us off."

Several supporters of the measure indicated that there might not be enough time to rework the bill and that, under these conditions, the final decision may revert to the administration. According to one Promotions Committee member, the final solution to the parking problem may be an increase in parking fees to $25.

The parking program had originated earlier this year when the problem of solution of the campus traffic congestion was given to Student Government. Following a meeting with officials of the administration, the SG officers turned the problem over to the Promotions Committee which, in turn, studied the situation for approximately six weeks. The committee was to introduce legislation which was to be forwarded, after passage, to the Consolidated University Board of Trustees for approval.

The measure, which had been submitted for consideration at the previous meeting of the legislature, was presented in full by committee members Ed Scott, senator of the School of Textiles, and Billie Jones, senator of the PSAM school.

In initial statements on the parking proposal, Jones stated, "the first consideration is to the dormitory students on this campus" and said the plan had been formulated to "relieve congestion on the major access roads in the morning and afternoons." In addition to providing vital statistics to support the color-coded program, the Promotions Committee had prepared a wall map to indicate the areas under revision. Jones also indicated that alternatives to this type of program may include a hiking of parking sticker fees to $25.

Following the presentation was a lengthy question session during which Scott and Jones were cross-examined by the members of the legislature. After about an hour of this activity, Senator John Schneider moved to table the bill on the basis that "not enough time had been allowed for due consideration of the measure." The motion passed but was reconsidered after several heated orations were given in support of the measure.

SG President John Atkins, in an unprecedented speech during deliberations, stated that "to say that not enough time was given for consideration is misleading since this bill has been before this body for two weeks and has been printed in its entirety in The Technician." Atkins further stated that the legislature "cannot run and hide from this problem."

However, after further debate the "Omnibus Parking Plan" was killed permanently by the legislature.

Several other committees introduced legislation to be considered at the next regular meeting of the legislature. The Academic Affairs Committee introduced a "Tutorial Project Resolution" and the Campus Welfare Committee introduced a "Campus Communication" resolution.

Design Professor Wins Art Society Purchase Prize

George L. Bireline, Associate Professor of Design at N. C. State, has won the $1000 purchase award in the 1964 N. C. artists' competition sponsored by the N. C. State Art Society.

It was announced at a meeting of the art society Wednesday night that Bireline had won the top award for a large oil entitled "Red Shirt," and had also copped the $750 N. C. State Harrelson Fund Purchase

Award for a painting entitled "Colossus."

Morris Parker, a fifth year design student, won a $500 second place purchase award with a sculpture, "Steel Construction No. 21."

Bireline joined the School of Design faculty in 1956, and is presently teaching first year Design. His wife Janice is also a member of the N. C. State faculty, teaching in physics.

Bireline's work has been widely exhibited. He was a winner in the N. C. artists' annual competition in 1957, and received an honorable mention in the Painting of the Year Competition, Mead-Atlanta Paper Company, 1958. He received the Purchase Award at the Sarasota Art Association Exhibition in 1960, and the first prize at the Artist Competition, Winston-Salem Gallery of Fine Arts, 1962.

Bireline also held a one-man show in the Andre Emmerick Gallery in New York City in 1964, and received good reviews.

Bireline received his Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from Bradley University, and his Master of Art and Creative Arts degree from the University of North Carolina.

Senatorial Responsibility

The student parking plan developed by the Student Government Promotions Committee is dead. It was killed not on its merits or deficiencies but because the majority of the membership of the student legislature failed to take any interest until the last possible moment. In addition, the legislature did not consider that no legislation on the parking problem could result in having the problem solved by higher authorities. In fact, the legislature refused to accept the responsibility bestowed on it by both the students and the administration.

The "Omnibus Parking Plan" was perhaps the most well-documented, well-researched, and well-presented program to come before Student Government. The committee, led by Senators Ed Scott and Billie Jones, had spent approximately two months gathering statistics, interviewing officials and students, and making studies of possible solutions of State's parking difficulties. The final result could not have pleased everyone but it was the only workable proposal presented which could have greatly alleviated the campus traffic problem.

Unfortunately, the student legislature was willing to neither accept the data gathered by its own committee nor to accept the responsibility of making a decision.

In fact, a considerable number of the senators had not even bothered to consider the bill which had been before the body for two weeks. Therefore, when the bill was presented for the second time, it was real news to some of the distinguished student representatives.

One senator observed that the entire legislature seemed to be taking an active interest in the measure on the floor. In view of the result, it might have been better for the student body if they had maintained their usual silence.

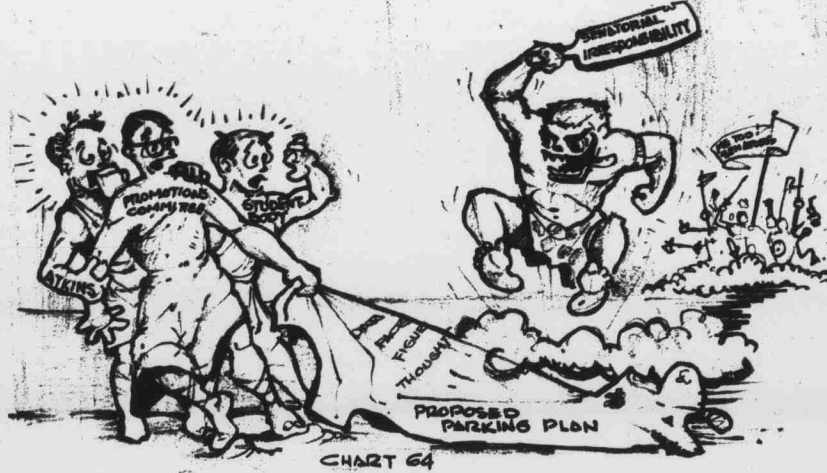

Senators John Schneider and Mike Stenhouse crippled the chances of the program by continually involving the deliberative body in minor revisions. The "me-tooers" among the senators who say nothing and allow almost anyone to do their thinking, followed right along and crushed the entire proposal. It is at times such as this that one might ask, "Who elected them?"

At this point the SG leadership and the Promotions Committee began to understand the absurdity of the senatorial response. Not only were the senators uninformed but they were also unwilling to assume the responsibilities of the offices to which they were elected.

The committee system is beginning to be effective in Student Government with each committee spending considerable time on legislation. The overall quality of this legislation has been vastly improved by the conscientious work of the committees. However, the utter discouragement which faced the Promotions Committee will probably face the others who attempt similar tasks.

This experience leads one to believe that Student Government is a house divided against itself. On one side are those members making great efforts to rehabilitate Student Government while on the other side is a sizeable group who prevent any positive action through their irresponsibility.

At the beginning of the year, Student Government President John Atkins said "let us not continue" in the wake of past legislatures. Apparently few of the senators were listening.

COMPULSORY ROTC

To the Editor:
Re: Compulsory ROTC

ROTC's purpose is to interest the college student in a military career. Any benefits derived along the way by the student who must complete two years of ROTC, and has no intention of entering the advanced two years are negligible in my opinion and observation.

Mr. Snell opens his argument with the ridiculous and unconfirmable statement . . . "compulsory ROTC has been beneficial to every cadet ever enrolled in the program."

Mr. Snell is obviously "sold" on ROTC, as he can't conceive of anyone not benefiting from having been enrolled (not necessarily voluntary) in the program.

"Woody" argues that anyone in advanced ROTC is there because "the benefits are obvious" and that anyone (faculty included) who did not go into the advanced program ". . . could not really see . . ." its benefits. Does this sound vaguely like circular reasoning?

To answer all of "Woody's" arguments would be a redundancy, as any half critical person can see for himself the many fallacies in his arguments.

All too often it's people like "Woody" Snell, blind to any opinion other than his own, that gain a position of trust and authority through our sloth and make us regret our lack of interest in our leaders.

With supporters like "Woody" ROTC doesn't need enemies!

LOUSY CONDITIONS

To the Editor:

Just what good is it to try to do something about the "lousy campus conditions"? For instance, what happened when someone tried to do something about the "lousy Slater food conditions"? NOT A DAMN THING.

Have you, editor, or you, news editor, or you, assistant editor, ever eaten at Slater's? You ought to try waiting to be served, having a Colored server plop (yes, plop) a large scallop in her mouth, chew it and at the same time ask you "Wa cha wan?" (What do you want?) Or the emptying of garbage into a garbage can within two feet of a table? Or the sight of periodically every table covered with dirty dishes because of a lack of help? There is nothing like it for great appetizing appeal.

Over a period of three days there was actually a large variety of two kinds of pie. On one of these days there were five pieces of pie left at 6:15 p.m. (What an exquisite selection!)

On another occasion during breakfast (I found out later), baking powder had "accidentally" been dropped into the hot cake batter. A fork could not be driven into the hot cakes (I tried). If it had been rat poisoning perhaps the matter would have been looked into. But since it was only a student and since a student is only a number which has no personality, the matter is really unimportant.

"How does everyone like Slater Food Service?" Now I ask, how naive can one get? Everyone laughs at the signs being put up around campus; this is, everyone but those who eat at Slater's.

Why shouldn't one "give up caring"? It doesn't do one bit of good for a student to care. Does the administration care? Does the Student Government care? Does Slater's care?

APATHETIC STUDENT

To the Editor:

Since I have been a student at State, I have heard a great deal about the "apathetic" student, just as I heard a great deal about this species during my freshman year at Tulane and my sophomore year at Carolina. The "apathetic" student is not restricted to State College—he is more the norm than the exception at every major university in the United States.

But, what of it?

We are attending State College, paying both taxes and tuition, for one purpose, the acquisition of a degree. Few, if any, are interested in an "education." (Actually, since State is geared for production just as any other type of factory, there is little room for the leisurely search for truth, which is, after all, the essence of education).

Again, what of it? Why should we care about anything outside our quest for degrees, and a little relaxation when the grind becomes too much? In the modern world, relative success depends upon relative initiative and a college degree. Those without the initiative and requisite brainpower aren't here in the first place.

So, the only thing lacking is the degree, a piece of paper stating that, theoretically, a certain amount of knowledge has been acquired through a formal process, knowledge that, no doubt, could be acquired outside the academic treadmill. But, then, it's the degree that counts—if I wanted an education, if I had a burning desire to learn the answer to the question, I wouldn't be here in the first place.

COMMON SENSE AND LEVEL-HEADEDNESS

To the Editor:

The opinion poll sponsored by the Consolidated University Student Council (page 4, November 18th Technician) presents the opportunity for the students on this campus to show their common sense and level-headedness. The time has come to stop trying to make a fight out of a hopeless cause; the alumni fought well, but it's obvious that they only succeeded in having attached to this institution an official name more ridiculous than any proposed by the Consolidated University Board of Trustees.

The issue at hand is not one of pride but of common sense. If this institution is ever to achieve the true university status envisioned by so many, it cannot—it must not—be differentiated from the other branches with regard to its name. Of course, no one wants our fine institution to be confused with those at Chapel Hill, Greensboro, and now, Charlotte. But the way to individual recognition is through individual achievement, not petty bickering over a name change.

For once, let's force the alumni to think of the good of their alma mater instead of their own foolish pride. In 20 years I hope to be able to tell my son that "the university I graduated from changed its name and is now a very important center of learning," not that it merely no longer exists, an argument used by one of the proponents of North Carolina State University this past spring. I urge all of my fellow students to endorse the name, "The University of North Carolina at Raleigh." Even the most stubborn will have to admit that it is far better than the present misnomer.

CONGRATULATIONS!!

To the Editor:

I would like to congratulate the men of Alexander Dorm on their efficiency in littering the grounds and tennis courts adjacent to their dorm. Their discovery that certain airfoil designs "fly" in a rather unusual sense, does not give them license to unlimited testing of such designs in a manner which causes such revolting messes. Third floor members are the main offenders, yet the whole dorm seems to condone the mess. I suggest that the people causing the mess consider the unpleasant position that Alexander Dorm faces if this wholesale testing continues.

Campus Comments

For all those sexually, academically, or academically frustrated students (and that oughta cover just about everyone on campus) we print the following which appeared in the Northeastern News:

Frustration is losing your last dime in a coke machine after spending your next to last dime on a bag of salted peanuts.

Frustration is breaking your only sensomatic pencil half-way through an IBM-card final.

Frustration is thinking she'll be saying "yes" any minute now when she excuses herself for a moment to blow her nose.

ACC Championship Seniors Honored

By ARTHUR DUMONT
Success for the Wolfpack footballers is a 5-2 conference record and the first back-to-back football championship in the school's history.
Three of the reasons for the successful season are Bennett Williams, Glenn Sasser and Ray Barlow, all of whom were named to the first string All-ACC team.
In post season activities Glenn Sasser will be heading to the annual Blue-Gray game in Montgomery, Alabama. Sasser has been drafted by the New York Jets and the St. Louis Cardinals. He and Miss Mandy House of Scotland Neck, N. C., have decided to combine their talents—the wedding will be tomorrow.
Bennett Williams is heading to the annual Senior Bowl in Miami, Florida. Williams was a co-captain of the Pack this season.
Wolfpack quarterback Ron Skosnik has been named as this year's recipient of the Governor's Trophy as the outstanding football player. Skosnik will receive the trophy at one of State's home basketball games.
Appropriate recognition should be given to the fourteen seniors who have finished their college football careers at State.

Bill Hall of Plymouth, N. C., Ray Barlow of Crewe, Va., Glenn Sasser of Tarboro, N. C., Steve Parker of Durham, N. C., Rosie Amato of Easton, Pa., Dave Carter of Lynchburg, Va., Bennett Williams of Ahsokie, N. C., Whitey Martin of Florence, S. C., Golden Simpson of Plymouth, N. C., Silas Snow of Rocky Mount, N. C., Lou DeAngelis of Reading, Pa., Ron Skosnik, Pete Falzarano and Jimmy Guin.
And then someone in the crowd at Carolina said: "Wait until next year!"

Freshman Team Has Great Potential

By JEEP BLACK
"This bunch could develop into a fine team," stated freshman basketball coach Lou Bryant, referring to the 1964 crop of yearlings.
This is Bryant's first year with the Wolfpack. He graduated from Wofford College in 1954 and since then was for seven years assistant coach at Wake Forest.
He stated there are five players on the team who are on basketball scholarships and one on a baseball scholarship.
Bruce Leith is 6-5 and comes from Havertown, Pa. He averaged around 16 points a game in high school.
Bill Mavredes averaged 16 points a game at his school in Richmond, Va., last year.
Another winner, Worley Ward (6-4) averaged 16 points a game at Kingsport, Tenn.
Jim Coker (6-5) averaged 19 points a game in Allentown, Pa., and Jack Douglass (6-1) of Pittsburgh, Pa., averaged 21 points a game.
Alex Cheek (6-3), the baseball scholarship winner, averaged 15 points a game from Grimsley of Greensboro.

the season opened with a loss to the varsity, followed by a 79-68 victory over Edwards Military Institute Tuesday night. The Wolflets' next game will be in Winston-Salem against the Deaconlets prior to the varsity contest Saturday night.

"It will take time (to develop the team, but) they have good spirit, good overall ability," said Bryant.
"We have good overall height even though we don't have a good rebounder now.
"We should help the varsity some next year," he stated.
Bryant concluded with, "I'm not singling out any individual (as to ability). It's too early to tell yet and hard work will tell."
"The schedule this year should give the team a good chance to develop," he added. As expected,

WKNC Radio to Return After Months Of Silence

WKNC, the campus radio station, is scheduled to return to the air Monday at 5:55 p.m. following two months of silence.

Bill Powell, station manager, presented to the members of the Board of Student Publications Wednesday a new format established for the station. The station closed down October 7 to rebuild equipment and reorganize the staff.

The station will sign on the air at 600 kilocycles Monday through Friday at 5:55 p.m. Sign-off time is 9 p.m. but the station will sign on again at 12:55 a.m. for two hours of taped music.

The station will be off the air each Saturday but will operate from 6:55 p.m. until midnight on Sundays.

Powell stated this schedule and programs are subject to change. The station will conduct a poll of the students prior to Christmas holidays to seek opinions about the programs. The programs will consist of a variety of musical shows and campus and international news.

An hour-long musical program is scheduled at 8 p.m. daily, featuring a specific type of music, including folk, top 40, jazz and Broadway hits.

During the two months off the air, the station has repaired old equipment and has installed several hundred dollars worth of new equipment.

The station has discontinued services to Peace College, Powell said, due to lack of response. Also, the station's advisor, George Hall, who is director of WUNC-TV, is now conducting regular training classes for new apprentices.

Powell said he felt the station's biggest problem was lack of competent staff members. He said the present staff consists of six members with experience and four apprentices.

Review of 'Virginia Woolf'

'Better Than Broadway'

By MAX HALPEREN
Asst. Professor,
NCS English Dept.

It was only a one-night stand in the small but handsome Frank Thompson Theatre, but we may mark with a red letter the day Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? was booked into the campus. We had a company and a play for which no apologies need be made in the name of local pride or local promotionism.

In some ways, in fact, the touring company did a slightly better job than the Broadway group. And, while they were clearly understudying their New York counterparts, the players here created a subtly different version of the play.

As all the interested world knows by now, Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? deals with an all-night drinking party at the home of a middle-aged history professor, George (performed by Kendall Clark) and his wife, Martha (Vicki Cummings), daughter of the college president. Their guests are Nick (Donald Briscoe), a young biology teacher, and his wife, Honey (Bryary Lee), who enlivens the evening by throwing up at least two—and perhaps three—times. Not that the party is otherwise lacking in vigor; to quote George: "it gets pretty bouncy. . . ." Humiliated by Martha time after time, George finally loses control and tries to strangle her; then, rather mysteriously, he dominates the remainder of the play.

George represents the American male who, fearful of his more feral impulses, has repressed them. But such repression, to Albee, results in inadequacy and ineffectiveness on all levels of behavior. Thus George is inadequate as lover and husband, and ineffective as an intellectual. Only after the turning point of the play, when his repressed impulses are reawakened, is George supposed to emerge as a forceful human being.

The company obviously was playing up the humorous and the naturalistic elements of the play, and playing down its symbolic aspects. But they succeeded so admirably in what they did that one cannot help feeling that theirs, after all, was a very possible version of the play, and that they simply chose to develop a dimension of Who's Afraid one might otherwise have missed.

Preregistration Plan Encounters Problems

The University's second attempt at preregistration already has its problems, but this time the trouble is with the students and their advisors, not the computer, according to C. P. Greyer, assistant director of registrations.

Greyer said students are being careless about filling out the registration cards. He cited the cards turned in to his office Monday, the first day of preregistration for the spring semester, as an example.

"Of the 107 cards received, 44 were rejected by the computer because of incorrect information," he said.

In order to correct such mistakes, all students must report to their advisors during the week of December 14-18, Greyer said.

Greyer explained that his office personnel is checking the cards before sending them to the computer, but he said his staff was not large enough to check each item separately.

"Students are failing to abbreviate the departments correctly and many times they are listing courses not being taught this spring," he continued.

Greyer warned that students should preregister as early as possible to avoid standing in lines when they turn in the cards at Peele Hall to be stamped. Preregistration will continue through December 11.

He also said regularly enrolled students taking courses in the evening, should write in "evening" beside the courses on their registration cards.
